ICOMOS PRINCIPLES FOR THE PRESERVATION AND CONSERVATION-RESTORATION OF WALL PAINTINGS

5TH AND FINAL DRAFT FOR ADOPTION AT THE ICOMOS GENERAL ASSEMBLY, VICTORIA FALLS, OCTOBER 2003

INTRODUCTION AND DEFINITION

Wall paintings have been cultural expressions of human creation throughout history, from the earliest beginnings, such as rock art, extending up to present day murals. Their deterioration, accidental or intentional destruction constitutes a loss affecting a significant part of the world's cultural heritage. The Venice Charter (1964) has provided general principles for the conservation-restoration of cultural heritage. The Amsterdam Declaration (1975) introducing the concept of integrated conservation, and the Nara Document on Authenticity (1994) dealing with cultural diversity, have expanded these principles. Taking into account these and additional relevant contributions, such as the ICOM-CC Code of Ethics (1984), Document of Pavia (1997), and E.C.C.O. Professional Guidelines (1997), the aim of this document is to provide more specific principles for the protection, preservation and the conservation-restoration of wall paintings. This document, therefore, reflects basic and universally applicable principles and practices, and does not take into account particular problems of regions or countries, which can be supplemented at regional and national level by providing further recommendations where necessary.

The richness of wall paintings is founded on the variety of cultural expressions, aesthetic achievements, and the diversity of materials and techniques used from ancient until present times. The following articles refer to paintings created on inorganic supports, such as plaster, brick, clay and stone, and do not include paintings executed on organic supports, such as wood, paper and canvas. Composite materials in many historic buildings need special consideration outside the scope of this document. Architectural surfaces and their finishing layers, with their historical, aesthetic and technical values have to be considered as equally important components of historic monuments.

Wall paintings are an integral part of monuments and sites and should be preserved in situ. Many of the problems affecting wall paintings are linked to the poor condition of the building or structure, its improper use, lack of maintenance, frequent repairs and alterations. Also frequent restorations, unnecessary uncovering, and use of inappropriate methods and materials can result in irreparable damage. Substandard and inadequate practices and professional qualifications have led to unfortunate results. It is for this reason that an appropriate document covering the principles of proper conservation-restoration of wall paintings is necessary.

ARTICLE 1: PROTECTION POLICY

A necessary approach to the protection of wall paintings of every culture and religion is to list and make inventories of monuments and sites including wall paintings, even in cases when they are not presently visible. Laws and regulations for the protection of cultural heritage must prohibit the destruction, the degradation or alteration of wall paintings, including their surroundings. Legislation should not only provide for the protection of wall paintings, but also make available resources for research, professional treatment and monitoring, and provide for the appreciation of their tangible and intangible values by society.

If interventions are required, these should be carried out with the full knowledge and the consent of the authorities responsible. Legal sanctions should be provided for any violation of such regulations. Legal provisions should also consider new discoveries and their preservation pending formal protection. Regional, urban or architectural development projects, such as the construction of roads, dams, conversion of buildings, etc. affecting wall paintings should not be carried out without an initial impact assessment study and without providing appropriate remedies for their safeguard.

Special efforts must be made through the co-operation of various authorities to accommodate and respect the cult function of religious paintings without compromising their authenticity.

ARTICLE 2: INVESTIGATION

All conservation projects should begin with substantial scholarly investigations. The aim of such investigations is to find out as much as possible about the fabric of the structure and its superimposed layers with their historical, aesthetic and technical dimensions. This should encompass all material and incorporeal values of the painting, including historic alterations, additions and restorations. This calls for an interdisciplinary approach.

The methods of investigation should be as far as possible non-destructive. Special consideration should be given to wall paintings that may be hidden under whitewash, paint layers, plaster, etc. Prerequisites for any conservation program are the scientific investigation of decay mechanisms on macro and micro scale, the material analysis and the diagnosis of the condition.

ARTICLE 3: DOCUMENTATION

In agreement with the Venice Charter, the conservation-restoration of wall paintings must be accompanied by a precise program of documentation in the form of an analytical and critical report, illustrated with drawings, copies, photographs, mapping, etc. The condition of the paintings, the technical and formal features pertaining to the process of the creation and the history of the object must be recorded. Furthermore, every stage of the conservation-restoration, materials and methodology used should be documented. This report should be placed in the archives of a public institution and made available to the interested public. Copies of such documentation should also be kept in situ, or in the possession of those responsible for the monument. It is also recommended that the results of the work should be published. This documentation should consider definable units of area in terms of such investigations, diagnosis and treatment. Traditional methods of written and graphic documentation can be supplemented by digital methods. However, regardless of the technique, the permanence of the records and the future availability of the documentation is of utmost importance.

ARTICLE 4: PREVENTIVE CONSERVATION, MAINTENANCE AND SITE MANAGEMENT

The aim of preventive conservation is to create favourable conditions minimising decay, and to avoid unnecessary remedial treatments, thus prolonging the life span of wall paintings. Appropriate monitoring and the control of the environment are both essential components of preventive conservation. Inappropriate climatic conditions and moisture problems can cause deterioration and biological attacks. Monitoring can detect initial processes of decay of the painting or the supporting structure, thus preventing further damage. Deformation and structural failure leading even to possible collapse of the supporting structure, can be recognised at an early stage. Regular maintenance of the building or the structure is the best guarantee for the safeguard of the wall paintings.

Inappropriate or uncontrolled public uses of monuments and sites with wall paintings can lead to their damage. This may necessitate the limitation of visitors and, in certain cases, involve temporary closure to public access. However, it is preferable that the public should have the opportunity to experience and appreciate wall paintings as being part of the common cultural heritage. It is, therefore, important to incorporate into the site management careful planning of access and use, preserving, as far as possible, the authentic tangible and intangible values of the monuments and sites.

Due to various sociological, ideological and economical reasons many wall paintings, often situated in isolated locations, become the victims of vandalism and theft. In these cases, the responsible authorities should take special preventive measures.

ARTICLE 5: CONSERVATION-RESTORATION TREATMENTS

Wall paintings are an integral part of the building or structure. Therefore, their conservation should be considered together with the fabric of the architectural entity and surroundings. Any intervention in the monument must take into account the specific characteristics of wall paintings and the terms of their preservation. All interventions, such as consolidation, cleaning and reintegration, should be kept at a necessary minimal level to avoid any reduction of material and pictorial authenticity. Whenever possible, samples of stratigraphic layers testifying to the history of the paintings should be preserved, preferably in situ.

Natural ageing is a testimony to the trace of time and should be respected. Irreversible chemical and physical transformations are to be preserved if their removal is harmful. Previous restorations, additions and over-painting are part of the history of the wall painting. These should be regarded as witnesses of past interpretations and evaluated critically.

All methods and materials used in conservation and restoration of wall paintings should take into account the possibility of future treatments. The use of new materials and methods must be based on comprehensive scientific data and positive results of testing in laboratories as well as on sites. However, it must be kept in mind that the long term effects of new materials and methods on wall paintings are unknown and could be harmful. Therefore, the use of traditional materials, if compatible with the components of the painting and the surrounding structure, should be encouraged.

The aim of restoration is to improve the legibility of form and content of the wall painting, while respecting the original creation and its history. Aesthetic reintegration contributes to minimising the visibility of damage and should primarily be carried out on non-original material. Retouching and reconstructions should be carried out in a way that is discernible from the original. All additions should be easily removable. Over-painting must be avoided.

Uncovering of wall paintings requires the respect of the historic situation and the evaluation of what might be lost. This operation should be executed only after preliminary investigations of their condition, extent and value, and when this is possible without incurring damage. The newly uncovered paintings should not be exposed to unfavourable conditions.

In some cases, reconstruction of decorative wall paintings or coloured architectural surfaces can be a part of a conservation-restoration program. This entails the conservation of the authentic fragments, and may necessitate their complete or partial covering with protective layers. A well-documented and professionally executed reconstruction using traditional materials and techniques can bear witness to the historic appearances of facades and interiors.

Competent direction of conservation-restoration projects should be maintained at all stages and have the approval of the relevant authorities. It would be desirable that independent supervision of the project were insured by competent authorities or institutions without commercial interest in the outcome. Those responsible for management decisions must be named, and the work must be implemented by professionals with appropriate knowledge and skills.

ARTICLE 6: EMERGENCY MEASURES

In urgent cases, immediate emergency treatment is necessary for the safeguard of wall paintings. Materials and techniques employed must permit later treatment. Appropriate conservation measures must follow as soon as possible with the permission of the relevant authorities.

Detachment and transfer are dangerous, drastic and irreversible operations that severely affect the physical composition, material structure and aesthetic characteristics of wall paintings. These operations are, therefore, only justifiable in extreme cases when all options of in situ treatment are not viable. Should such situations occur, decisions involving detachment and transfer should always be taken by a team of professionals, rather than by the individual who is carrying out the conservation work. Detached paintings should be replaced in their original location whenever possible.

Special measures should be taken for the protection and maintenance of detached paintings, and for the prevention of their theft and dispersion.

The application of a covering layer concealing an existing decoration, carried out with the intention of preventing damage or destruction by exposure to an inhospitable environment, should be executed with materials compatible with the wall painting, and in a way that will permit future uncovering.

ARTICLE 7: RESEARCH AND PUBLIC INFORMATION

The establishment of research projects in the field of conservation-restoration of wall paintings is an essential requisite of sustainable preservation policy. Investigations based on research questions, which have potential to add to the knowledge of degradation processes should be encouraged. Research that will expand our knowledge of the original painting techniques, as well as materials and methods of past restoration practices are essential in the implementation of appropriate conservation projects. This research is also relevant to related disciplines of the arts and sciences. The disturbance of significant fabric for study, or to obtain samples, should be minimised.

Dissemination of knowledge is an important feature of research, and should be done on both the professional and popular levels. Public information can substantially advance awareness of the need for preservation of wall paintings, even if conservation-restoration work may cause temporary inconveniences.

ARTICLE 8: PROFESSIONAL QUALIFICATIONS AND TRAINING

Conservation-restoration of wall paintings is a specialised discipline in the field of heritage preservation. As this work requires specific knowledge, skills, experience and responsibility, conservators-restorers of this kind of cultural property should be professionally educated and trained, as recommended by the Code of Ethics of the ICOM-Committee of Conservation (1984) and by associations such as E.C.C.O. (European Confederation of Conservator-Restorers' Organisations) and ENCoRE (European Network for Conservation-Restoration Education).

ARTICLE 9: TRADITIONS OF RENEWAL

In many regions of the world, the authentic painting practices of artists and craftsmen are continued by repeating historic decorative and iconographic programs using traditional materials and techniques. These traditions, satisfying religio-cultural needs and keeping to the Nara principles, should be sustained. However, as important as it is to preserve this special knowledge, this does not imply that the conservation-restoration treatments of wall paintings are to be carried out by craftsmen or artists.

ARTICLE 10: INTERNATIONAL CO-OPERATION

Sharing the care for common heritage is nationally and internationally an accepted concept. It is therefore necessary to encourage the exchange of knowledge and to disseminate information at every level. In the spirit of interdisciplinary collaboration, conservators-restorers of wall paintings need to liaise with their colleagues in other countries and with relevant institutions and specialists around the world.

ICOMOS PRINCIPES POUR LA PRÉSERVATION ET LA CONSERVATION RESTAURATION DES PEINTURES MURALES

5<sup>ÈME</sup> ET ULTIME VERSION POUR ADOPTION
À L'ASSEMBLÉE GÉNÉRALE DE L'ICOMOS, VICTORIA FALLS, OCTOBRE 2003
(TRADUCTION DE L'ANGLAIS)

INTRODUCTION ET DÉFINITION

Les peintures murales sont des expressions culturelles de la création humaine à travers l'histoire, depuis les origines, avec l'art rupestre, jusqu'aux œuvres d'art mural actuelles. Leur détérioration ou leur destruction, accidentelles ou intentionnelles, constituent une perte qui affectent une part importante du patrimoine culturel de l'humanité. La Charte de Venise (1964) pose les principes généraux de la conservation/restauration du patrimoine culturel. La Déclaration d'Amsterdam (1975), qui introduit la notion de conservation intégrée, et le Document de Nara sur l'authenticité (1994), qui aborde la diversité culturelle, complètent ces principes. Parallèlement à ces documents et des contributions complémentaires pertinentes telles que le code d'éthique ICOM-CC (1984), le Document de Pavie (1997) et les Règles Professionnelles de l'E.C.C.O. (1997), l'objectif du présent document est de fournir des principes plus spécifiques pour la protection, la préservation et la conservation/restauration des peintures murales. Le présent document met en exergue des pratiques et des principes de base universels et ne tient pas compte des questions spécifiques à des régions ou des pays qui peuvent être traitées au niveau régional ou national par des recommandations supplémentaires si cela s'avérait nécessaire.

La richesse des peintures murales repose sur la diversité des expressions culturelles, des réussites esthétiques et sur la variété des matériaux et des techniques utilisés depuis les temps anciens jusqu'à nos jours. Les articles suivants se réfèrent à des peintures créées sur des supports inorganiques, tels que le plâtre, la brique, l'argile ou la pierre, et excluent des peintures réalisées sur des supports organiques, tels que le bois, le papier ou la toile. Les matériaux composites utilisés dans de nombreux bâtiments historiques doivent recevoir un traitement particulier, hors du champ d'application du présent document. Les surfaces architecturales et les couches de finition, avec leur valeur historique, esthétique ou technique, doivent être considérées comme des composantes importantes des monuments historiques.

Les peintures murales font partie intégrante des monuments et des sites et doivent être préservées in situ. Nombre de problèmes affectant les peintures murales sont liés au mauvais état des bâtiments ou des structures, à leur mauvais usage, à l'absence d'entretien ou à de fréquentes réparations et modifications. De même que de fréquentes restaurations, des dégagements intempestifs et l'usage de méthodes et de matériaux inadaptés peuvent entraîner des dommages irréparables. Des pratiques et des qualifications professionnelles insuffisantes ou inadéquates ont conduit à des résultats fâcheux. C'est la raison pour laquelle, un document pertinent, définissant les principes corrects de conservation/restauration des peintures murales, s'avère indispensable.

Article 1 : Politique de protection intégrée

Une approche initiale et nécessaire de la protection des peintures murales, quelles que soient les cultures et les religions, exige que l'on dresse l'inventaire des monuments et des sites comportant des peintures murales, même lorsqu'elles ne sont pas visibles. Les lois et les réglementations qui régissent la protection du patrimoine culturel doivent interdire la destruction, la dégradation ou la modification des peintures murales et de leur environnement. La législation doit non seulement protéger les peintures murales, mais aussi mettre à la disposition des spécialistes des ressources pour la recherche, organiser le traitement et la surveillance professionnels et faire valoir leurs valeurs matérielles et immatérielles aux yeux du public.

Si des interventions s'avèrent nécessaires, celles-ci doivent être entreprises en pleine connaissance et avec l'accord des autorités de tutelle. Des sanctions doivent être prévues pour toute violation des réglementations. De même que des dispositions doivent prendre en compte les nouvelles découvertes et leur préservation dans l'attente d'une protection officielle. Des projets d'aménagement urbains ou d'infrastructures, tels que la construction de routes, de barrages, la transformations de bâtiments, etc. qui affecteraient des peintures murales, ne doivent pas être entrepris sans réaliser une étude d'impact préalable et sans prévoir des dispositions adéquates de sauvegarde.

Des efforts particuliers doivent être fournis, avec la coopération de différentes autorités, pour intégrer et respecter la fonction culturelle des peintures religieuses sans compromettre leur authenticité.

Article 2 : Investigation

Tout projet de conservation doit commencer par de rigoureuses investigations scientifiques. L'objectif est de rassembler autant d'informations que possible sur la composition de la structure et les différentes couches superposées et d'évaluer leurs dimensions historiques, esthétiques et techniques. Doivent être englobés dans de telles études toutes les valeurs matérielles et immatérielles de la peinture, ainsi que les modifications, les ajouts et les restaurations historiques.

Cela exige une approche pluridisciplinaire.

Les méthodes d'investigation doivent être autant que possible non-destructives. Une attention particulière doit être accordée aux peintures murales qui pourraient être dissimulées sous un lait de chaux, des couches de peinture, du plâtre, etc. Les préalables à tout programme de conservation sont l'investigation scientifique des mécanismes de macro- et micro-dégradations, l'analyse de matériau et le diagnostic de l'état.

Article 3 : Documentation

En accord avec la Charte de Venise, la conservation/restauration de peintures murales doit être accompagnée d'un programme défini de documentation sous la forme d'un rapport analytique et critique, comportant des illustrations : dessins, relevés, photographies, cartographies, etc. L'état des peintures, les caractéristiques techniques et formelles relevant du processus de la création et de l'histoire de l'objet doivent être connus. De plus, chaque étape de la conservation et de la restauration, chaque matériel et chaque méthode utilisés doivent être consignés. Ce rapport doit être conservé dans les archives d'une institution publique et mis à la disposition du public intéressé. Des copies de ces documents doivent aussi être conservées sur place ou confiés à la garde des responsables du monument. Il est également recommandé que les résultats des travaux soient publiés. Les documents doivent être classés par chapitres identifiables, par exemple investigation, diagnostic et traitement. Les supports traditionnels écrits et graphiques peuvent être complétés par des documents numérisés. Quelle que soit la technique utilisée, la permanence de ces archives et leur disponibilité future est toutefois de la plus haute importance.

Article 4 : Conservation préventive, entretien et gestion de site

L'objectif de la conservation préventive est de créer des conditions favorables pour limiter le délabrement et éviter le recours à des traitements curatifs inutiles afin de prolonger la durée de vie des peintures murales.

Une surveillance compétente et le contrôle de l'environnement sont tous deux des composantes essentielles de la conservation préventive. Des conditions climatiques défavorables et des problèmes d'humidité peuvent provoquer des détériorations et des attaques biologiques. Grâce à la surveillance, les premiers symptômes de délabrement de la peinture ou de la structure du support sont détectés, permettant ainsi d'éviter l'extension des dommages. Une déformation ou une défaillance de la structure, conduisant à de possibles effondrements, peuvent être détectés à un stade précoce. L'entretien régulier du bâtiment ou de la structure est la meilleure garantie pour la sauvegarde des peintures murales.

Les usages publics inappropriés et incontrôlés des monuments et des sites comportant des peintures murales peuvent engendrer des dommages à ces dernières. Cela peut impliquer une limitation des visites et, dans certains cas, la fermeture temporaire au public. Il est toutefois préférable que le public ait la possibilité de connaître et d'apprécier des peintures murales qui font partie du patrimoine culturel commun. Par conséquent, il convient d'intégrer à la gestion des sites un aménagement adapté de l'accès et de l'usage des lieux, afin de préserver, autant que possible, les valeurs authentiques matérielles et immatérielles des monuments et des sites.

Pour diverses raisons sociologiques, idéologiques et économiques, de nombreuses peintures murales, souvent situées dans des lieux isolés, sont victimes de vandalisme et de vols. Dans ces cas-là, les autorités doivent prendre des mesures préventives particulières.

Article 5 : Conservation et restauration

Les peintures murales sont une partie intégrante du bâtiment ou de la structure. En conséquence, leur conservation doit être envisagée en même temps que la structure de l'entité architecturale et leur environnement. Toute intervention sur le monument doit prendre en compte le caractère spécifique des peintures murales et les conditions de leur préservation. Toutes les interventions, telles que la consolidation, le nettoyage et la réintégration, doivent être réduits au niveau minimum nécessaire permettant d'éviter toute disparition de matériel et toute diminution d'authenticité picturale. Partout où cela est possible, des échantillons de couches stratigraphiques attestant l'histoire des peintures doivent être préservés, de préférence in situ.

Le vieillissement naturel est un témoignage du temps et doit être respecté. Les transformations chimiques et physiques irréversibles doivent être préservées s'il est nuisible de les ôter. Les restaurations précédentes, les ajouts et les couches picturales recouvrant des couches plus anciennes font partie de l'histoire des peintures murales. Ils doivent être considérés comme des témoins des interprétations et évalués de façon critique.

Toutes les méthodes et tous les matériaux utilisés dans la conservation et la restauration des peintures murales doivent prendre en compte l'éventualité de futurs traitements. L'utilisation de nouveaux matériaux et de nouvelles méthodes doit être basée sur des données scientifiques détaillées et des résultats d'essais concluants en laboratoire et sur site. Toutefois, on doit garder à l'esprit que les effets à long terme de nouveaux matériaux et de nouvelles méthodes sur les peintures murales sont inconnus et peuvent être dommageables. Par conséquent, l'utilisation de matériaux traditionnels, compatibles avec les composantes de la peinture et la structure environnante, doit être encouragée.

L'objectif d'une restauration est d'améliorer la lisibilité de la forme et du contenu des peintures murales tout en respectant la création originale et son histoire. La réintégration esthétique contribue à réduire la visibilité des dommages et doit d'abord être testée sur un matériel qui ne soit pas d'origine. Les retouches et les restitutions doivent être discernables de l'original. Tous les rajouts doivent être facilement réversibles. Trop de repeint doit être évité.

Le dégagement de couches picturales exige le respect de la situation historique et doit tenir compte de l'évaluation des pertes éventuelles. Cette opération ne devrait être effectuée qu'après étude préliminaire de leur état, de leur importance et de leur valeur et, lorsque cela est possible, sans provoquer de dommages. Les peintures récemment mises au jour ne doivent pas être exposées à des conditions défavorables.

Dans certains cas, la reconstitution de peintures murales décoratives ou de surfaces architecturales colorées fait partie d'un programme de conservation et de restauration. Cela suppose la conservation des fragments authentiques et pourrait impliquer leur recouvrement complet ou partiel par des couches protectrices. Une reconstitution bien documentée et exécutée de manière professionnelle, à l'aide de matériaux et de techniques traditionnels, témoigne de l'apparence historique de façades et de décors intérieurs.

Une direction compétente doit rester vigilante durant toutes les phases du projet de conservation/restauration et doit recevoir l'approbation des autorités compétentes. Il serait souhaitable qu'un contrôle indépendant du projet soit assuré par des autorités ou des institutions compétentes, libres de tout intérêt commercial dans le résultat final de l'opération. Les responsables des décisions de gestion doivent être nommés et les travaux doivent être mis en œuvre par des professionnels possédant des qualifications et des compétences adéquates.

Article 6: Mesures d'urgence

Dans les cas d'urgence, des mesures immédiates de sauvetage sont nécessaires pour sauvegarder des peintures murales. Les matériaux et les techniques utilisés doivent permettre un traitement ultérieur. Des mesures de conservation appropriées doivent être entreprises aussi vite que possible avec la permission des autorités compétentes.

La dépose et le transfert sont des opérations radicales, irréversibles et dangereuses qui affectent sévèrement la composition physique, la structure matérielle et les caractéristiques esthétiques des peintures murales. Ces opérations ne sont par conséquent justifiables que dans des cas extrêmes, lorsque aucune solution de traitement in situ n'est possible. Dans de telles circonstances, la décision de dépose et de transfert doit toujours être prise par une équipe de professionnels plutôt que par la personne chargée d'effectuer le travail de conservation. Les peintures déposées doivent être recollées à leurs emplacements d'origine dans la mesure du possible.

Des mesures spéciales doivent être prises pour la protection et l'entretien des peintures détachées de leur support d'origine, ainsi que pour la prévention des vols et la dispersion des œuvres.

L'application d'une couche de recouvrement dissimulant un décor existant, dans l'intention de prévenir des dommages ou la destruction par l'exposition à un environnement inhospitalier, doit être exécutée avec des matériaux compatibles avec les peintures murales et d'une manière qui permettra leur restitution ultérieure.

Article 7 : Recherche et information du public

La création de projets de recherche dans le domaine de la conservation/restauration des peintures murales est une condition essentielle à l'élaboration d'une politique de préservation durable. La recherche sur des questions susceptibles de compléter nos connaissances sur les processus de dégradation doit être encouragée. La recherche qui étendra nos connaissances sur les techniques de peintures originales, ainsi que sur les méthodes et les matériaux utilisés dans les restaurations anciennes est essentielle pour la mise en œuvre de projets de conservation adéquats. Cette recherche est également pertinente pour les disciplines connexes des arts et des sciences. Il convient de réduire au minimum les perturbations causées aux matériaux qui serviront à l'étude ou à l'obtention d'échantillons.

La diffusion de la connaissance est une caractéristique importante de la recherche, et devra être faite à destination de la communauté scientifique autant que du grand public. L'information du public contribue considérablement à la prise de conscience de la nécessité de préserver les peintures murales, même si les travaux de conservation/restauration peuvent causer des désagréments temporaires.

Article 8 : Qualifications et formation professionnels

La conservation/restauration de peintures murales est une discipline spécialisée appartenant au domaine de la préservation du patrimoine. Ces travaux exigent des connaissances, des compétences et des savoirs-faire particuliers, de sorte que les conservateurs-restaurateurs de ces biens culturels doivent recevoir une éducation et une formation professionnelle comme le recommandent le Code d'éthique du Comité de conservation de l'ICOM (1984) et les associations telles que E.C.C.O. (European Confederation of Conservator-Restorers' Organisations) et ENCoRE (European Network for Conservation-Restoration Education).

ARTICLE 9: TRADITIONS DE RÉNOVATION

Dans quelques régions du monde, les pratiques authentiques des artistes et des artisans se poursuivent par la reproduction de programmes iconographiques et de décors historiques utilisant des techniques et des matériaux traditionnels. Ces traditions, qui répondent à des exigences religieuses et culturelles et s'en tiennent aux principes de Nara, doivent être maintenues. Des savoir-faire traditionnels en matière de peintures sont également des conditions préalables pour la conservation/restauration. Cependant, bien qu'il soit important de préserver ces connaissances particulières, cela n'implique pas que les traitements de conservation/restauration de peintures murales soient effectués par des artisans ou des artistes.

Article 10: Coopération internationale

Partager l'entretien d'un patrimoine commun est une notion acceptée au niveau national et international. Il est donc nécessaire d'encourager l'échange des connaissances et la diffusion des informations à tous les niveaux. Dans l'esprit d'une collaboration interdisciplinaire, les conservateurs - restaurateurs de peintures murales ont besoin de travailler en liaison avec leurs collègues d'autres pays et avec les institutions adéquates et les spécialistes du monde entier.
